If you've been sexually assaulted don't be afraid to talk to your doctor.

Every 45 seconds in this country, someone is sexually assaulted — over half a million women and children a year. The American Medical Association wants this nightmare to end.

Dr. Lonnie Bristow, the President of the AMA, believes that "victims are scared into silence by a mistaken sense of shame." The truth must be heard. The AMA has identified sexual assault as the Silent Violent Epidemic. And to help deal with this brutal crime, new treatment guidelines have been made available to physicians nationwide. They can help with the physical and emotional trauma.

If you've felt up to now that there was no one you could trust. No one who would believe you. It's time to break the silence. The AMA wants you to know you can talk to your doctor. Don't ever be afraid to tell.

This message was paid for by the physicians of the American Medical Association.
